From Your Executive Director

Shared Spaces

We have a problem. What is our problem? Square footage. Space. Room. It is a good problem to have, since it reflects our growth, but it is still a challenge. The bottom line is that we have more activities than ever, and our membership continues to grow. (We added nearly 300 new members in 2016, which doubled the number of new members from 2015.) We are constantly trying to find creative solutions to the challenge of program space, and that means that we are looking for ways to make our existing space more flexible. For example, the Center was built at a time when many people were making the transition from home computers to portable electronic devices. The idea of a computer lab was “cutting edge” when construction began, and had become obsolete within a year or two of opening. We constantly monitor the use of our individual spaces, and realized that the lab was under-utilized, and so we converted it into a much needed conference room.

In some cases, the furnishings may be the issue. Our current stage does not allow flexible programming due to the difficulty of moving the heavy sections. We are looking into options that will give us the ability to open the space when we need to, but still allow us to have the stage when needed. In other spaces, heavy furniture is being replaced with more portable versions that allow us to re-configure the layout, which gives us the ability to offer more programming with the available space that we have.

This situation sometimes leads to scheduling conflicts, and we have learned some valuable lessons. (Drum circles should never be in an adjoining room to people who are trying to concentrate on a competitive game of bridge or euchre.) But, we also get it right most of the time, and we will continue to explore new ways to be good stewards of this facility. Thank you for your patience as we move Mill Race Center forward.

Dan Mustard
Executive Director

March 8, April 5 & May 3.
Pat Conroy died in March, 2016 shortly after his 70th birthday. I have wanted to teach something of his for some time. When his last book, The Death of Santini, came out, I decided we would read The Great Santini in April. This is a fictional account of his family life when his father was an officer in the air force. Much of our reading has been about father/son relationships and will provide a lot of background for the study of this book. His last book is a non-fiction account of The Death of the Great Santini and how they were able to resolve their differences. If we study Long Day’s Journey Into Night by Eugene O’Neal in February we will be even better informed about authors who use their family stories as background for their plays and novels. Conroy’s description is outstanding. One critic for the Houston Chronicle wrote “Reading Pat Conroy is like watching Michelangelo paint the Sistine Chapel.”

When you sign up for the course, there will be a handout written by Conroy about why he found it necessary to write about his family. Read this first. Questions will be at MRC last week of March.

New
Powerful Tools for Caregivers
Program fee: $15.00; 5:30-7:30pm
(Includes: supper for both caregivers and loved ones, care and activities for loved ones by Just Friends, and program materials)
The Powerful Tools for Caregivers program is listed among the highest-level evidence based disease prevention and health promotion programs, having undergone the Administration for Community Living Administration on Aging’s Older American Act Title IIID program process. A basic premise of Powerful Tools for Caregivers is that caregivers generally believe they are doing everything they can do to provide good care for their chronically ill or disabled loved one, but are not doing enough to care for themselves. Thus, the program focus is not on the care recipients’ disease or disability, but on enabling caregivers to improve their self-care with a set of ‘tools.’ The focus is on enhancing caregivers’ wellbeing and coping abilities, with the key message throughout: While a caregiver – Thrive, not just survive!
